

DESCENDANTS OF THOMAS WATTON OF CASTOR

- 1. Thomas Watton d. AFT 1585, Castor, Northamptonshire, England. Prior to 1100 AD there existed a village of Wutton (spelled many different ways) in Northamptonshire, England, about 4 miles south of Northampton, the county seat.
 - The name Wutton (various spellings) has been found as early as 1200, taking the name from the village, now spelled Wootton. By 1600 there were families of this name scattered throughout the county. One of these families, which spelled the name Watton, lived in the northeast part of the county, in the section to the west of the cathedral city of Peterborough, around the village of Castor. In 1538, Henry VIII ordered all parishes to begin recording baptisms, burials, and marriages. In the Castor parish register there is a record of the burial of a John Watton in 1588. Further baptisms and burials found under the name Watton were found to be children of Thomas and Jane Watton. There exists a record of the birth of a Thomas Watton in 1585, which possibly could be the Thomas Watton who married Jane and who died after 1641. This Thomas Watton would have been 23 at the time of the birth of the Thomas Watton born in 1608 (and died in infancy). If this is indeed that Thomas Watton, then his father is listed as Thomas Watton as well (ref. IGI record batch 7032313, serial sheet 85, 06apr1972az). Refer to records beginning with this name.
 - The eminent historian/historiographer/writer (and one of my closest friends) Peter Berresford Ellis (also know under the pseudonym Peter Tremayne, author of the internationally bestselling Sister Fidelma Mysteries), provided the following probable etymology of the surname Wootton/Wooton/Watton/Wooten
 - Wootton (as is today) in Northamptonshire was quickly absorbed by the Angles during the 6th century AD – and was in the kingdom of Mercia, but close to the borders of East Anglia. The name was given as Wetone in the Domesday Books, but Wudtun two centuries earlier. It emerged again as Wootton in the 14th century. Current academic thinking agree that the etymology is from the Anglo-Saxon (Wud(u)tun) – the fort or farmstead in a wood – and, of course, that wood would be Salcey Forest, a medieval hunting forest. Ironically, that does come from Latin – salicetum – willow wood. Wudtun is a good name, recognised in Anglo-Saxon with basic vocabulary older the developing Norman-French.
 - Dr. Patrick M. O’Shea, in researching the surname for this researcher, developed the following:
 - According to Marie-Therese Morlet’s Dictionnaire Etymologique des Noms de Famille (Paris: Perrin, 1991), the name appears to be an English re-spelling of “Outin” (pronunciation VERY close to Wooten), which is in turn a variant form of “Autin,” a contracted form of “Augustin.” The spelling “Outin” seems to be specifically found in Normandy and Picardy. So far, it seems that this is the best guess for a name origin. Now, this is pure speculation, but it seems odd to me that the Normans would pick such a name out of the blue. There are two saints by the name of Augustine (Augustine of Hippo, 354-430, and Augustine of Canterbury, d. 613). Augustine of Canterbury was clearly a cleric of the Saxons (no Norman connection there), and Augustine of Hippo (near Carthage) was one of the greatest figures of Christianity in the late Roman Empire. It seems that Augustine of Hippo would have been the inspiration for taking such a name in this region, as he was a figure of the late Roman Empire, which of course covered what was to become Normandy at that time. Taking the next leap, families adopting this name in the 900s or 1000s would more likely have been Romano-Gaulish in origin rather than Norman (Norman control of the region notwithstanding). In other words, if you wish to stretch this logic a bit, it seems plausible that Wooten may have its earliest origin as a Gaulish, and hence Celtic name! Here’s the evolution: 1) Augustinus (Latin, from Saint Augustine of Hippo); 2) Augustin (early Norman form); 3) Autin (abbreviated); 4) Outin (variant); 5) Wooten (anglicized).
